Registrations are open for a five-day Healthy Country Planning Open Standards Workshop in the stunning Kakadu National Park, Northern Territory.

This workshop will give people a working knowledge of how these tools work and how to use them in their own work.

It is offered through the Protected Areas Learning and Research Collaboration (<http://www.palrc.com>) in conjunction with one of its partners, Charles Darwin University.

Using a well-proven adult learning approach, the workshop will run in the Kakadu National Park, and is targeted specifically at working in cross cultural situations.

WORKSHOP CONTENT

We will provide an introduction to the ideas and steps of the Open Standards for the Practice of Conservation (<http://cmp-openstandards.org/>) and Healthy Country Planning.

Using either your own project, or a case study that we provide, participants work together in small teams through the entire planning and management cycle, and learn how to combine the steps into a useful, ongoing adaptive management approach.

Workshop sessions run throughout the day with occasional evening sessions, as well as a field trip.

The workshop is based on a similar workshop run over the past 2 years in Tasmania, also through the PALRC, and similar approaches used internationally.

Contact Michael.Lockwood@utas.edu.au for the potential to count the workshop towards university qualifications.

WHO

The workshop is aimed at individuals or teams who are intending to develop, implement and check plans for the management of natural and cultural values. Participants can be either individuals or project teams.

Ideally, participants will have a basic understanding of either making or using plans, or need to learn. Teams with a range of skills and knowledge are encouraged.

The workshop will be delivered by experienced practitioners and coaches lead by Stuart Cowell of Conservation Management, who has helped many teams through the process across Australia.

WHEN

Monday 31 October - Friday 4 November 2016.

WHERE

Aurora Kakadu Hotel: located on the Arnhem Highway, South Alligator, Kakadu National Park, 220 kms from Darwin, Northern Territory, Australia.

COST

$AU2,200 per person includes all food, accommodation, return transport from Darwin to Kakadu and materials.
